

This story was meant to be published as a front-page story, titled “BIG TIME SUCCESS, BIG TIME POWER, BIG TIME SLIME BALL!”, the week before John Big’s death. It is unknown whether this story was ordered to be stopped, or it was simply shelved due to John Big’s death.

The Oakdale Times claims that the story is a hoax and was never written in the first place. However, an anonymous source at the paper leaked a physical copy of the test run of that day’s paper to the media confirming the story’s existence. The following page is a picture of the actual unpublished paper.

At this time the actual author is unknown.

The Okdail

October

BIG TIME SUCCESS, BIG

In front of every powerful family, there is a figurehead. Behind every powerful figurehead is a closet full of skeletons. John Big III is no different, however he needs a warehouse to hide all of his skeletons. Hollywood writers dream about these types of stories — even more so when it's true. John Big has it all. He has money, power, and good looks. He is also arrogant, mean spirited and has a knack for making enemies. He is known for running companies into the ground, then disappearing from the public eye for long periods of time. Mr. Big also has one well-behaved daughter, a wonderful, faithful and well-liked ex-wife, a brother and two parents. He lives on the Big Family Estate and it seems that the small army of people who live there have plenty of reasons to dislike him. This article will examine the upcoming expose' book "Casting a Big Shadow: The Rise and Fall of John Big" by new author

Ren
foll
imp

The
that rela
the
beh
of a
exp
in li
its beh
con
or v

It m tota
thin